I. Personal Connections: It's About Trust

How toddlers show trust

1. How does the toddler show that the presence of familiar adults helps her do things on her own?

Toddlers need to see the adults who are important to them as they play. Although their increased mobility allows them to be more active and self-reliant, they are easily scared by the new world now open to them. They need trusted adults nearby so they can feel safe.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Gain courage—try the slide at the park, but only after sitting beside her caregiver for a while.
- Stay close—bring toys to an adult and pile them on his or her lap instead of playing in the other room.
- Try again—come back to where her caregiver is sitting, stand there briefly, and then go back to the sand pile.
- Show she needs you—go off to explore something while a familiar adult is sitting nearby, but begin to cry when that person moves toward the door.
- Take a comforting look—glance at a caregiver for reassurance and then go off to play with friends in another room.

How does this toddler show that the presence of familiar adults helps her do things? (Include dates.)

10.3 After eating breakfast in the classroom, Demi looked at her caregiver, smiled, and then went and stood by the door to the bathroom to wash her hands.

11.12 Demi stayed by the caregiver, talking and moving her hands as if she was engaged in conversation.

2. How does the toddler respond to new people?

Some toddlers are fascinated by new people and things, and others are cautious and unsure. For many, their reactions depend on the kind and the amount of their experiences with new people as well as their support from the adults who care for them.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Hold on for support—reach for a caregiver's hand when the salesclerk says Hello.
- Act afraid—cling to a familiar adult for a long time at a children's gathering before approaching other children.
- Jump in, yet hold back—rush to open the door but wait until the family member says Hello before greeting the person at the door.
- Follow a grown-up's lead—pat the kitten sitting in an unfamiliar adult's lap after watching a caregiver do it.
- Show cautious curiosity—go over to see the man fixing the kitchen sink but not say hi until the parent comes in.

What does this toddler do around unfamiliar adults? (Include dates.)

10.26. When a new caregiver arrived in the room Demi hid between her mother's legs. She lowered her head, and stayed far away as she observed.

II. Feelings About Self: Learning About Me

How toddlers express who they are

1. How does the toddler show how he feels?

Toddlers show their wishes, worries, fears, and expectations through their behaviors, play, and actions. They find out who they are, what they can do, and who is in charge by exploring their surroundings, making choices, and experiencing some frustrations and some successes.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Enjoy his image—look in the mirror and smile at his reflection as he tries on dress-up hats.
- Show he did it—show his mom or caregiver a sandwich he made “all by self!”
- Become stubborn—insist on wearing his shorts even though it’s cold outside.
- Practice saying “no”—answer no to everything, whether it’s to a question about wanting a cookie or a comment that it’s time to get ready for nap.
- Lose it—fall down on the floor wailing because he can’t have the truck someone else is playing with.

How does this toddler show how he feels? (Include dates.)

10.15 I brought Demi a toy bus, and I showed her how the rear door opened with a button. Demi was very focused on learning how to do it. When she saw her cousin, she got the bus and showed her how it worked.

2. How does the toddler show he is trying to manage his behavior?

Toddlers are exploring the limits of their behavior. Their wish to be powerful and to control things can sometimes lead them to resist adult guidance and support. Adults can help them manage frustrations by being enthusiastic about toddlers’ efforts, setting limits, and comforting them when things don’t go their way.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Want it his way—insist on taking out the puzzle even though his caregiver says it’s time to put things away.
- Get frustrated—give in to anger and tears while trying to string beads, but then pull himself together and try again.
- Do what you say—close the kitchen drawer after being told with words to keep it closed.
- Get the message—climb down off the sofa or the table when a caregiver calls his name, frowns, or shakes her head.
- Clean up—run over to the sink to wash off his hands when he’s finished fingerpainting.

How does this toddler show he is trying to manage his behavior? (Include dates.)

10.30 Demi was told to stop playing in the sink. She walked to the corner of the room and sat down by herself. A few minutes later she came up to me and smiled.

11.20 Demi waited near the door for her mother. When she saw her, she smiled and made a loud sound with her throat.

III. Relationships With Other Children: Child to Child

How toddlers act around other children

1. How does the toddler play with other children?

Toddlers watch and play briefly with other children, often imitating them. They may play together for brief periods, though they can become quite possessive and demanding and need adult support and direction as they play.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Take what she wants—watch for a while and then grab the shovel from a peer who is digging in the sand.
- Try it out—run across the play yard waving her arms and screaming “Yiiii!” behind another child doing the same.
- Pretend with another child—sit down to “eat” at the table with another child in the dramatic play area.
- Give in—let go of another child’s truck only after that child yells loudly.
- Follow her impulses—watch another child build a stack of cardboard blocks, then push it over.

How does this toddler play with other children? (Include dates.)

10.2 A child attempted to take the drum Demi was using in the classroom. Demi said, “No! Mine!” and earned it to the corner of the room.

2. How does the toddler show her awareness of how other children feel?

Toddlers are inconsistent in their awareness of other children’s feelings. Sometimes they show empathy, and sometimes they act possessive, using words like “No!” or “Mine!” Their response to other children depends largely on the way the adults who care for them behave socially.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Comfort a friend—pat another child on the back and say, “All right, all right,” when the other child cries after his mommy leaves.
- Add to a friend’s project—add a block to another child’s block structure when that child stops to look around.
- Help a friend—help a classmate look for her lost doll.
- Give a hug—throw her arms around a friend as he sings a song.
- Protect what’s hers—shout “No!” when another toddler comes near her while she’s holding a cracker.

In what ways does this toddler react to the feelings of other children? (Include dates.)

10.18 Sofie was crying. Demi patted her hand and said “There. There.”

11.3 Sofie reached for the puzzle Demi was using. Demi said, “No!” and gave Sofie a different puzzle.

IV. Understanding and Communicating: Toddler Talk

How toddlers understand and communicate

1. How does the toddler show understanding of words and follow directions?

Toddlers show that they understand by the way they respond, whether or not they do what is asked or indicated. They can provide answers to simple questions, and they are beginning to understand what will happen later in the day or who has more of something.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Wait until later—stop fussing when told he can have a snack after he comes back from his walk.
- Get the message—go to the refrigerator door when you ask him if he wants some apple juice.
- Connect words and meaning—point to many body parts on himself (nose, eyes, hair) as well as on someone else.
- See the whole picture—make the sounds of the animals that are named or pointed to in the picture book.
- Understand directions—run to the sink when you say, "It's time to wash your hands for lunch."

How does this toddler show he understands you? (Include dates.)

11.10 Demi pointed at a cup and said, "water, water" when the teacher asked if she was thirsty.

11.18 Demi said "Good-bye" when I said it would be time to leave soon.

2. How does the toddler use words and word combinations to communicate?

While toddlers' understanding of language continues to be much greater than their ability to express themselves in words, their spoken vocabulary grows almost daily. Toddlers learn to use words to label, question, and express feelings.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Ask for something—use his own word for juice or water when he wants a drink.
- Make sentences—put several words together, such as, "More juice" or "Go out now?"
- Know the characters—name pictures in the storybook as you read to him.
- Make demands—repeat, "Me go, me go!" and tug at Mom's hand as he watches his brother put on his coat to leave for school.
- Show his preferences—shake his head no and insist, "Cookie, cookie!" when asked if he wants a pretzel or an apple for snack.

What are the ways this toddler uses words to communicate? (Include dates.)

10.28 Demi pointed at the radio and said, "Pio pio." I turned it on and she began to sing by imitating the tones and vowel sounds.

11.4. Sofie reached for Demi's cup. Demi said, "That's mine."

3. How does the toddler show he wants to begin to participate in conversations?

Although most toddlers lack the words to take part fully in conversations, they understand about the give and take of talking to someone. You can see this even in their babbling and their repetition of single words.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Talk to his animals—babble in a run-on flow of words to his stuffed animals while he feeds them and puts them to bed.
- Follow an adult's lead—say "Bye" after his parent reminds him as they leave child care.
- Sound like he's talking—imitate the flow and inflection of a conversation while jabbering away to a friend or baby sister.
- Give a report—tell about something that happened on his walk.
- Try to be included—interrupt a conversation between two adults by repeating one word over and over in an attempt to become a part of the conversation.

How does this toddler try to participate in conversations? (Include dates.)

11.16. We were singing our welcome song. Demi said, "Fine" when I sang, "how is Demi?"

11.20 We were reading today. Demi used a combination of English, Spanish and babbling as she talked about the book.

V. Exploration and Problem Solving: Toddler Discoveries

How toddlers explore and figure things out

1. How does the toddler explore and learn how things work?

A toddler's life seems to consist of constant motion as they touch, examine, try things, drop, and pick things up. They are busy learning how things work, and how they don't work.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Experiment with water—pour and fill at the water table or sink.
- Fill and dump—put small things such as clothes pins or large beads into containers, dump them out, then put them back in again.
- Figure it out—push a toy truck forward and backward to see the wheels turn and hear the siren whistle.
- Make sounds—bang a pot cover on the tile floor, on the rug, and then on the tile floor again.
- Turn on the lights—look with wonder from her hand to the overhead bulb that goes on and off as she flips the switch up and down.

In what ways does this toddler explore the things in her world? (Include dates.)

11.17 Demi stacked the blocks and she knocked them down, laughing. She did this for 5 minutes.

11.28 Demi watched the children going through the tunnel and then went in herself.

2. How does the toddler show her increased memory skills?

Toddlers are comfortable when they can relate to routines and know what to expect. Familiarity helps toddlers feel they have some control and helps them understand how the world works.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Repeat what she hears—hum or sing over and over a few words or a short tune she learned from listening to a tape or CD.
- Help out—remember to take her dish over to the sink after she finishes eating.
- Choose a book she knows—run to the shelf to get a favorite book to look at during rest or nap time.
- Want to buckle up—hold up her seat belt to have it fastened after she climbs into her car seat.
- Put things in their place—put the round, square, and triangle pieces into their correct holes in the form board.

How does this toddler show her increasing memory skills? (Include dates.)

12.3 Demi put the cups on the tray and brought the tray to the dolls. She then dressed and undressed the dolls as I had shown her to.

3. How does the toddler use toys and other objects with a purpose?

At this age children want to do most things "By self!" and they show that they expect certain results. They enjoy repeating things they've done before, but they also want to try new ways to make things happen. They keep several ideas in mind and can carry them out to reach their goals.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Match them up—experiment with matching toys to the toy shape-labels taped on the shelves in order to show where the toys should be stored.
- Do a puzzle—dump out the pieces of a four-piece puzzle and then put them back together again.
- Deal with cause and effect—hammer pegs into a pounding board, turn it over and pound them back from the other side.
- Sort by color—put all the red pegs in a container and the blue ones in a pile on the table.
- Share her tower—call you over to see how high she piled the unit blocks.

In what ways does this toddler use toys and other things with a purpose? (Include dates.)

11.20 Demi put her doll in a car and gave it a ride all over the classroom.

12.3 During music, Demi looked for instruments and passed them out to each child. When we were finished, she picked them up and put each one in its place.

VI. Movement and Coordination: Toddlers in Motion

How toddlers move their bodies and use their hands

1. How does the toddler show increasing balance and coordination as he combines actions?

Toddlers waddle when they walk, hold their arms out for balance, and stand with their legs wide apart. Yet they love to experience their new freedom of movement. They may bump into things and often find it difficult to turn corners or steer themselves.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Find his seat—turn around, back up to a chair, and sit down.
- Try a new way—make a noisemaking toy work by pulling it while walking backward.
- Make it go—ride his kiddie car by pushing with both feet together.
- Enjoy silly moves—play “Ring Around the Rosie,” loving the falling-down-on-purpose part best.
- Dart and scoot—practice running, climbing, jumping with joy and speed, often calling “Look at me.”

How does this toddler move around? (Include dates.)

10.16 Demi picked up the toy mop and moved all over the classroom pretending that she was cleaning. She bent down to mop under the tables and chairs.

10.28 Demi stepped up on to the little bench to pretend to dust the shelf.

2. How does the toddler use his fingers, hands, and eyes to accomplish a variety of tasks?

Toddlers coordinate finger, hand, and wrist movement with increased skill, though their movement is often not precise. They practice their grasp and use their eyes and hands together as they examine objects and put things together and take them apart.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Make it fit—slide envelopes into slots, keys into locks, blocks into shape sorters.
- Scribble and paint—hold his crayon in a full-fist-on-top grasp as he swirls and twirls with his crayons, markers, or chalk.
- Crank it up—turn the key on a wind-up toy.
- Make a necklace—string large beads, using one hand to slide the bead on while the other hand holds the string.
- Tell a story with his fingers—imitate the hand motions of a variety of fingerplays.

How does this toddler use his fingers, hands, and eyes to do things? (Include dates.)

11.4 Demi took off her earrings in the classroom.

11.28 Demi completed a six piece puzzle with small knobs.

3. How does the toddler participate in self-help activities?

Toddlers are becoming very interested in their own self care, especially in feeding themselves. They like routines so this is a good time to establish health routines such as brushing teeth after meals and washing hands before meals.

The toddler might do one or more of the following:

- Dress up—try to put on his own shirt (frontward or backward) and socks.
- Do it by himself—insist on washing his own hands and drying them without help.
- Use a cup—drink from a cup with little spilling.
- Choose his clothes—run to the drawer and pull out his red shirt even though you've chosen a white one.
- Help out—help with the household chores such as putting napkins and spoons on the table.

How does this toddler participate in self-help activities? (Include dates.)

11.17 Demi put on her own shoes and did up the velcro.
